

Lil Bits #1

Thank you so much for purchasing Lil Bits. I had so much fun creating them. For the yes, no, maybe, elements and seasonal cards there are no keywords or meanings as these are probably something you are quite used to working with. This oracle should be used intuitively and I expect that each card will have a variety of meanings depending on the querent, their question and you as the reader. Eventually I will be making a companion to this deck as I already know of more subjects, concepts and symbols that I would enjoy with it.

Some of the cards might strike you as odd but they are personal for me and so I will be explaining a few of them here in that matter not as keywords but what the cards mean to me.

Abundance - When I was a child as far back as I could remember my mother baked and frosted sugar cookies for Christmas every year. As we got older we were allowed to frost our own cookies and eventually as adults help her completely with this process. Her friends, co workers and family all got used to her "famous" sugar cookies and it was really a big part of the holiday season for us. When she passed I tried to continue this but it was just not the same, so after three years I stopped and decided it was best as a part of our history with my Mother. I see abundance in a variety of ways visually but as a child, which is what I wanted to view these cards as, as much as I could, this is what abundance meant. That special time of year and my Mom's sugar cookies all spread out on the table ready to be put in special boxes.

Couple – My grandparents were married 72 years. He passed away 3 months shy of 73 years. They spent their whole lives together as a couple. When I think of a successful marriage they always come to mind. This is why I decided this card should feature an elderly couple walking hand and hand in the park.

Free – When I was a kid summer time meant catching lightening bugs in my grandparents yard and we had just as much fun releasing them as catching them.

Hopefully you love the deck!

Steph
